

She was a small town girl, with big dreams. Life in Town was very slow, easy, predictable. The soft clouds drift along the pristine blue sky, penetrated by the weak rays feeding the earth. Olivia craved an escape, a way to breathe and freefall. She fell hard and fast. Ethan, was her adventure, he stole her heart.

17 years old, her whole life before her eyes, she knew this was where it would change, change for the better? He made her laugh, he made her cry, he taught her how to love and believe in happily ever after. Their love for one another was impulsive, spontaneous, careless. He was prince charming, she was rescued. No one understood, least of all the driver who jolted her from her fairytale. Olivia was swept off her feet, she died falling.
